

Abstract

A novel method and apparatus is presented for controlling the slew rate of a transitioning signal on an integrated circuit transmission line. The signal driver which drives the signal onto the transmission line is connected to the transmission line via redistribution metal characterized by a characteristic capacitance appropriate to adjust the RC time constant of the transmission line to shape the signal edges to a slope resulting in the desired slew rate.

1004432 01003
"0070" 224400F